

Style was not the aim of Hart concert

ANN HART

By SHIRLEE IDEN
Even before he died, many people were concerned about the best way to memorialize the U.S. Senator Philip A. Hart.
His senate colleagues held a memorial and the federal government acted to name a new office building for the Michigan senator who was often called "the conscience of the senate."
His wife, Jane Briggs Hart, said the subject, came up only once between them. Hart said he would like a scholarship fund set up for Lake Superior State College.
Hart died Dec. 26. Last week, many of 2,500 friends and admirers did their part to make the scholarship a reality. About $40,000 was raised at a Hart Memorial Concert at the Ford Auditorium in Detroit.
Southfielder Paul Freeman, associate conductor of the Detroit Symphony, led the orchestra. Ann Hart, soprano, and daughter of Jane and Phil Hart, was the featured soloist, and State Supreme Court Justice G. Mennen Williams narrated Copland's "A Lincoln Portrait."
THE CONCERT was received enthusiastically by the audience. They gave Miss Hart and Williams standing ovations.

Commentary

Mrs. Hart said in a television interview that her daughter is a professional and no one need be embarrassed that she would be singing.
Miss Hart's professional debut was made in a recent production of "The Magic Flute" by the Michigan Opera Theatre in Detroit's Music Hall.
The 29-year-old soprano who is a petite under-five-foot-tall did not disappoint with her performance. She sang without a microphone and was probably heard best in her encore song a capella.
At a reception following the concert where Rosalyn Carter, wife of President Jimmy Carter, was the honored guest, Miss Hart greeted friends, relatives and well-wishers.
Wearing a yellow, flowing gown trimmed in black, she was the center of warm attention, along with her mother Jane. Earlier that day, another woman who was to attend the concert and reception called the Southfield Eccentric asking for the social editor.

"I want to look just right and not be overdressed," she said. "Mrs. Carter will be at the reception and a lot of others."

SHE DESCRIBED several choices of dress she had available for the event asking for help in making a choice and graciously expressing her thanks for the fashion advice.
There were 2,500 people at the Hart concert and a crushing crowd of more than 500 at the reception which followed.
It would have been pretty difficult to even see what any one person there was wearing, except for the principals involved. But, if you believe in ghosts, then it would be nice to think that the spirit of Phil Hart may have looked down at all those people giving all those scholarship dollars and smiled.
He wouldn't have cared what they were wearing.

Board stops free agendas

Approximately 70 Birmingham school district residents who receive board meeting agenda in advance by mail will have to pay for them in the future.
The Birmingham district includes a portion of northeast Southfield.
An annual charge of almost $10 will be required of persons who want agendas by mail. The annual rate for mailing agendas and minutes of meetings will be just under $12. About a dozen persons receive minutes by mail now.

The charges were approved by the board of education at its meeting Tuesday. The amounts approved cover postage and envelopes only and will be effective July 1, 1977.
