Forming by rule of thumb is becoming obsolete. But many farmers still want to be shown the value of grading fruits and vegetables and certain other fairs products. Without commonly accepted istandards for many products a considerable nart of the profits due to a systematic agriculture is loit.

The total value, for the United States, of such representative items as eggs and poultry indicate the magnitude of the interests now suffering from lack of adequate grading practices. These products for 1919 were and in agreement regarding grades, and the trade has been handtexpped, because or resulting diversities. The difficulties constantly arising bedsards are illustrated by the constantly arising bedsards are illustrated by the constant of a system of a New York broker who made a bid to a western shipper for a carload of eggs classed as "furfigerator firsts." The offer was accepted, and when the car arrived it could not be discovered that these eggs fitted any known grade of "refrigerated firsts." In the rather heated discussion that followed the western shipper finally announced that he had graded the eggs according to a standard of his own!

These are days when American preducers are looking to foreign markets. Abroad, even more than at home, recopited grades are an asset. Again eggs may be used as an illustration. Prior to 1914 the largest amount of eggs exported to the United Kingdom Yaried from 4000000 dozen to 100000 dozen. The Way has been opened for the development of this immense trade because there have been small imports from contineant Europe, But, in spite of the lead given us by the war, Canadian eggs have been bringing from 2 to 4 cents more in the British market than American eggs. Nor was it a question of seathment with the Englishmen. The Canadian shippers, annious to continue merchandizing connections established during the way, have been grading their eggs, and that fact has appealed to the discrimating British public.

Standardizing is Fundamental. The lesson to America is obvious. It applies not only the eggs, but the status that the case of the progress in a continue merchandizing connections established during the grade of the continue merchandizing connections of home of the discrimating British public.
