Moral perspectives

Is the best really yet to be?

The greatest and most universal fear in our society is the fear of getting old. It is the pervasive American obsession.

As the years advance, we tend to make little jokes about birthdays and we begin to understand why Jack Benny remained a perpetual 39.

This morbid fear of aging has given birth to a new vocabulary of euphemism.

At a time when four-letter words, formerly considered taboo, are now uttered without reticence, not only in private conversation, but in almost all social settings, I find it curious and remarkable that a certain word is still suppressed. The word is "old."

We do not speak of old age. We talk of "golden years." If the phrase weren't so sad, it would be ludicrous. We do not organize old age groups. We create "golden age clubs."

We now recognize a class of Americans that we call "senior citizens." Does that make the rest of us "junior citizens?" The word of old age is not addressed directly in American life.

BUT WE DARE NOT ignore this phenomenon. The advance of medical science has increased our life expectancy. At the same time, the likelihood is increased that we will undergo impairment, rejection, and unhappiness as we enter the years of advanced age.

The increased longevity of men and women is far from being the unequalled blessing for which the generations have prayed. It has turned out to be, with bitter irony, an embarrassment, a problem, sometimes a curse.

Some statistics may be instructive at this point. Nearly 33 million Americans are at least 60 years old, and their number is growing by 500,000 a year, at twice the rate of the total population. They constitute the single largest minority in the nation—more in the category of "aged" than in any non-white racial group in the United States.

As recently as 1900, the life expectancy in the U.S. was less than 50. Today it has risen to almost 70.

Reflection of this trend is found in the emergence of a new science called geriatrics, which is concerned exclusively with the aging process and its dependent problems.

Geriatrics is the answer of science to mankind's perennial prayer. We all want to live long, but none of us want to be "old." Geriatrics tries to satisfy both contradictory desires simultaneously.

SOONER OR LATER we will be forced to admit that we are not as good as we used to be. We don't want to hear this because we are afraid—afraid of the physical and psychological effects that age will have upon us; afraid of the inevitable loss of status that will accompany our retirement; afraid of our loss of independence; afraid of being left alone, rejected and abandoned.

As a response to that fear, one finds that anger and resentment towards the old is on the rise. It is as though the aged are an alien race to whom the rest of us will never belong.

A new term has been coined, "ageism," contempt for and discrimination against the aged. This bigotry is rapidly becoming as serious a problem as racism.

But there is this curious difference. It is very unlikely that we shall ever become black, but we may all grow old. We may become victims of the very forces of discrimination and exclusion that we aid and abet.

The author, James Michener, put

By RABBI IRWIN GRONER

this issue into clear focus when he wrote, "The problem of caring for the aged looms as the principal social problem of the balance of the century, greater than ecological apocalypticism, greater than overpopulation, greater than the energy crisis."
