How we must save the cities

Our family just returned from a three-day visit to Toronto. I was impressed by the vitality of this city and could not help but compare Toronto to the creeping decay and difficulties of the metropolitan Detroit area.

There is acknowledgment of the fact that the problems and the fortunes of the great city affect the whole region and therefore support and planning is provided by the larger governmental units.

The recent refusal by the City of Birmingham of low cost housing and the continuing battle over effective mass transportation in the metropolitan area highlights the major reasons for the spread of decay.

Regional government and effective, pollution-free transportation have enhanced a great Canadian city. Local neighborhoods are alive. The streets are full of people. There is no evidence of urban decay. Americans in large numbers visit this beautiful, alive city.

In the beautiful subway system of Toronto, notice state that this transportation service is provided through the support of the government of Ontario.

Without regional government, those able to will continue to flee from the problems of the central city. Effective mass transportation will continue to be frustrated and defeated.

By REV. DAVID STRONG

Without regional government, cities like Troy and Birmingham will turn down housing for the elderly and low income families and the segregation will continue. As a result, the decay and difficulties will spread.

Without regional government, we amass an ever-mounting debit cost for the next generations. Property, social services and quality of life will decay.

Social costs of urban decay, crime and the breakdown of neighborhoods and schools will spread to the cities of Royal Oak, Berkley, Oak Park, Melvindale and Dearborn.

There is no way to avoid regional government if we are to save the metropolitan area from gradual and progressive decay.

Miniatures at North Church

Miniatures are big hobby-wise, and the tiny offerings of 20 dealers will be gathered in North Congregational Church 28275 Northwestern, Southfield, 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Saturday. The church's second miniature show and sale will include plenty of specialties in sealed-down furnishings. A snack bar also will be open. Admission is $1 for adults and 50 cents for children.
