by LORENNE
GREEN

Dear Mrs. Green,
My spouse and daughter find it extremely amusing that I use a straight-edged object, (i.e.: an envelope) to maintain straight lines when writing on a mailing envelope. My husband says it fits right in with the fact I am constantly popping utensils and glasses into the dishwasher before people are through using them. Except for my dirty dish idiosyncrasy "My house is clean enough to be healthy and dirty enough to be happy!" My house is a Neat Nut. What is your opinion?
R.F., West Bloomfield

Yes, I can give you my opinion based on your handwriting, but I am not sure you are going to like what I must say. First of all, dependency is a very salient trait in your handwriting. Cuplike lead-in strokes on almost every word tell me that you are quite dependent. Also the use of a guide to write a straight line is another sign of dependency. When I can't tell you for certain if it is whether the dependency is upon husband, parent or just whom.

There are 3 main things that a graphologist cannot tell from the handwriting: 1. chronological age, 2. handedness (right or left), 3. male or female. However, I am assuming you are a very young person as this writing bespeaks immaturity. The ruler writer is not a spontaneous person, but one overly concerned that everything be done in proper fashion. This concern is enhanced by the retraced t stems which tell of your need to do everything in accordance with convention and the mores of society.

Your conspicuous use of circles for dots and all other punctuation point up your strong need to be individualistic. Further concern with self is noted in a large size middle zone of writing. The tiny loops at the bottom of your m's and n's suggest you are worried about trivial things.

So happy to see you have a sense of humor (soft curves on your capital M's and N's). A sense of humor is so important to daily living.

I wish to thank you for your letters and tell you that time allows me to answer them only through the column. If you have a question about your personality, please write to me in care of this paper on a full sheet of unlined paper in the first person singular.

Camp begins 31st summer

Interviews are being scheduled for summer campers at the Rooper Field Camp in Bloomfield Hills.

Located on a 12-acre site on Woodward Avenue, the day camp is open to all children between the ages of three and nine.

Children may register for 2, 4, 6, or 8 week periods and transportation is available for most residents of metropolitan areas.

The Rooper day camp program, which began in 1947, includes swimming, sports, arts and crafts, music, drama, dancing, shopwork, gardening, nature study, special events and overnights for children six to 11. For the younger day campers, special facilities, staffs and programs will also be provided.

In addition to its regular program, the camp is again offering the talent development program for children seven to 11. The program is offered to provide for the development of ability and talent of young children and to give them support and encouragement for their creative efforts. The special interest topics this summer will include science, dance, photography and carpentry.

The development program is open to children who are enrolled as campers in the Rooper Summer Day Camp for an additional small fee because of the specialized instruction. Families interested in applying to the camp and its talent development program should call 642-1500.

The day camp is a separate unit of Rooper City and Country School, an independent school for gifted students.
