Highway planners ripped, M-275 battle continues

The war over M-275 continues. The Michigan State Highway Commission has "put a cloud" over the long-standing cooperation among state, county and local officials, say officials of the Inter-County Highway Commission.

"The State Highway Commissioners completely ignored all planning, commitments and cooperative efforts that had preceded the M-275 project," said Franklin D. Meyers, executive director of the Inter-County Highway Commission, a seven-county highway planning group.

The group contends that the state highway commission, in cancelling the M-275 project, ignored all local planning and cooperation that had gone into the plan. It also charges that allowing the state highway commission's decision to stand sets a dangerous precedent.

"The real implication," Meyers said, "is to all counties and other communities is that a long-standing process of cooperative planning and action was short-circuited by the unilateral decision of the state highway commission."

"Any major highway that's been built in the last 25 years has come after a long process of planning and cooperation, including actual cooperative actions taken by state, county and local communities. Over a period of years, it has been the only way major highways could be built," Meyers said.

The cancellation of M-275, he said, "puts a cloud over all projects."

"How can other counties and communities count on their projects going through to completion when the state highway commission cancelled M-275 without cooperation of all the involved parties after years of joint planning efforts? That's the sort of thing that concerns our counties and should be worrying a lot of other communities, too," Meyers said.

Single servings for small families

By 1990, one or two-person household will be the rule rather than the exception, accounting for 56 per cent of all residences.

This Census Bureau population projection means food producers and grocers will be doing more to cater to small families.

Among their efforts will be the development of single-serving packages. These "just for one or two" sizes eliminate leftovers, storage problems, and are more economical.
