

ROBERT BYRNE

Byrne records 1st single

His songs have been recorded by other name artists and now Robert Byrne's first single features two of his own compositions.

On the Mercury release, Byrne, a former Birmingham resident, sings "Learning to Live Without You" and "Bound to Know the Blues." He wrote the later song, which won the American Song Festival grand prize last year, with Gary Griffin, also a Birmingham resident.

Byrne's parents now live at Wakefield in the Bloomfield area. Bob Byrne has moved to Alabama, where he makes his home and also records at Muscle Shoals.

"It's the pop capital of the south," Byrne said. "Bob Seger has recorded there many times. Muscle Shoals is a little-known place, unless you read album covers."

"If a singer does not have a band, he will come to Muscle Shoals and use the local rhythm section."

Byrne's songs have been recorded by Wayne Newton, Lorna Luft and the group, "Hot."

"I'm hanging on to the stuff that's really right for me," the singer-composer said.
