A colleague of mine currently is embroiled in a court case in which she is being asked to testify about, or possibly surrender notes she took for, a story she wrote about possible violation of Michigan's open meetings law.

After two subpoenas and two court appearances she's avoided taking the stand. The notes on the meeting in question are safe in a company vault and haven't seen the light of a courtroom.

She and our employer are determined to keep it that way, claiming protection under the constitution's guarantee of freedom of the press.

I haven't seen those notes either. But if they turn out like the ones I sometimes turn into stories, the parties of the first and second parts may be fighting over something undecipherable anyway.

Struggling through the non-scratching I sometimes make, I can only be thankful that no other eyes, legal or otherwise, are likely to be focused on them.

I usually know what I meant to write down by searching back in my mind, and I've never, well, hardly ever, been challenged about what eventually gets into the paper.

But after watching me in operation recently, I'm sure one poor fashion coordinator is wondering if he might better go to court.

Arriving at the store where I would talk to him for one of my rare forays into the fashion field, I realized that the notebook I had planned to use was still on my desk at the office.

But not to worry; I had a large white envelope in which I had stowed some other notes and similar vulnerabilities, and its backside would do very well.

I filled it with scribbling as I learned about what's current in New York. Then, as I was about to leave, my interviewee wondered whether I really would be able to read that envelope.

I assured him I would, and explained my notebook predicament. "I'd have been glad to lend you a notebook," he said.

I didn't tell him he wouldn't have been able to read that, either. Perhaps I should have explained I do my job for freedom of the press by making sure no one except I can read the notes I take.

New teacher starts with new term at Family Nursery

Family Life Nursery will be starting its new season with a new teacher, Barbara Ruskin. She assumes her post Sept. 11 in the school in North Congregational Church in Southfield.

She received her bachelor's degree in education from Wayne State University in 1962 and is currently working on her master's degree in preschool and parent education.

Her philosophy circles around an unstructured, flexible curriculum with emphasis on ego development and socialization. She uses creative arts and creative movements to lead the child to experiment with his or her own ideas to discover individual creative abilities.

Separate classes are held for three and four year olds through the season. Registration and inquiries will be taken by calling Vicki Spellman at 647-2884.

Mrs. Frederick Griswold

Alice Nan Engelbrecht and Frederick Daniel Griswold were wed in ceremonies conducted by Rev. William Brewster in Christ Church Cranbrook. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Curt M. Engelbrecht, of Farmington Hills, and he is the son of Mr. and Mrs. F. D. Griswold of St. Joseph, Mich.

For her wedding, the bride chose a gown of ivory quana, trimmed in chantilly lace worn with an ivory finger tip length veil. She carried a bouquet of white roses.

Her maid of honor was Felicia Engelbrecht, who served with attendants Frances O'Laughlin, Susan Griswold and Patricia Deisler, all clad in aqua blue quana gowns.

John Herrman served as best man with groomsmen Mark O'Laughlin, Douglas Donoho and David Haggard. Claire O'Laughlin served as her aunt's flower girl.

The bride earned both her bachelor and master degrees from Michigan State University, and will begin employment as an instructor at the University of Dubuque, in Iowa, this fall.

The groom is a graduate of Michigan State University, employed as a design engineer with the John Deere Co. in Dubuque.

The couple received 75 guests in Oakland Hills Country Club before leaving on a wedding trip to Florida. They will make their home in Dubuque.

Take that, old junk

The lure of venting frustrations which have been pent up in many a motorist's mind was too much for Chris Flood of Farmington. He took up the Jayvees' offer to smash a car at the Founders Festival. The green four-door Pontiac was found languishing in an auto graveyard without its two rear wheels. But that problem was soon remedied by festival-goers who smashed in the car's windows, hood, doors and grill. (Staff photo by Allen Schlossberg)
