m.m.memos

I've heard it said that the best assurance of a long life is to have long-lived relatives. If that's true, my brothers and I should be able to look forward to quite a few years.

We have a father who is 96, an aunt who will turn 89 this month and a stepmother who reached the 90-year milestone on the Ides of March.

To say nothing of two uncle-and-aunt sets, both of who have marked 50 years of marriage and involving four people all well into their 80s.

Whether longevity will be their legacy to me and my family is, of course, still a matter of conjecture. What is certain is that they have given us a collective example that aging can be graceful if tempered with acceptance, and that there are ways of continuing the good life despite handicaps.

My dad and his sister have little vision left, but they have found other people to serve as alternative eyes and appreciative life goes on.

One uncle (their little brother) still gets around with a much-reduced schedule of pastoral duties. The other uncle, finding care of his increasingly-handicapped wife too much for him, moved with her into a nursing home, and they both are lavish in their praise of the help they receive there.

But it is our 90-year-old step-mother who in recent months has had us on a state of amazement.

Earlier this year she was very ill.

By MARGARET MILLER

Her white blood corpuscle count was dangerously down, her body was rejecting transfusions and she developed pneumonia.

But then she received and accepted a transfusion from one of our daughters (who is related because she is a cousin as well as step-grandma) and at that point she began a slow climb back to better health than she has enjoyed for several years.

And to top it off, she showed me something phenomenal when I visited her and my dad last weekend. Growing in her snow-white tresses are a few hairs unmistakably black.

She wondered if it was because of the young blood she received. I told her she has found the fountain of youth.

I'm sure, in any case, she and our other elders have found a fountain of grace worth tapping into.

New Morning School sets open house

people," she said.

In conjunction with demonstrating a physical agility, Ms. Conway tries to arrange for an inter-relationship on an intellectual level with the audience, generally by forming a panel.

"The give and take is a real eye opener for many. With these kinds of programs we're showing a positive side to aging that so many just don't realize is there," she said.

"The youth culture once wanted to write these people off, yet our interaction with teens have been always super."

THE FIRST Friday in September, the Gathering Place's own band will be back to play music for dancing and listening both in the morning and afternoon. Every Friday will be dance day at the center.

Another something new on Fridays is a water-exercise class that begins this fall for seniors in Mercy Center's pool.

Open swimming hours are listed, along with each month's calendar available for the asking in the Gathering Place.

The calendar generally lists one or two workshops. This week, a three-part series winds up, called "As I Grow Older," at 1 p.m. Aug. 21. All of the workshops are without charge, and all come, Ms. Conway said, "with the most qualified leaders in their field."

Other special events for August are Luscious Lunch, set for Aug. 22 when members will tour Sarnia's Flower Gardens and Chemical Valley before lunching at Le Gourmet. Reservations are necessary for this outing.

A trip to Tiger Stadium is planned for Aug. 26 for the Detroit Tiger-Milwaukee Brewers game. On Aug. 27, the seniors take off for a day at the Michigan State Fair. Reservations are necessary for these outings, but there is still room on the bus for more.

Some offerings ask a small fee, but they are minimal.

Last speaker to visit the center for the month is Dr. Charles Young, a podiatrist, who will show slides on the care of the feet. He will give his presentation at 11:30 a.m., Aug. 29.

MS. CONWAY is looking for volunteers to bring meals to confined persons in the community.

The number of home-bounds vary from time to time, and currently a few more drivers are needed to fill the demand, which is a regular service of the Gathering Place.

Those who can offer a few hours are asked to call Monica Romare at 478-9147.

The only other call for help comes from Mrs. Singer who has groups of seniors working now towards Christmas by sewing for the Goodfellows and the handicapped in the community.

She is accepting unused fabric of any kind, and yarn, of any color, or strength or amount, in the Gathering Place.

Visitors who call at the Gathering Place are asked to use Mercy Center's Gate 4, on Eleven Mile, east of Middlebelt.

Karen Ross, senior adult program coordinator, in center, leads a group in a game that calls for the participants to find a way to get untangled from one another. Bea Honston, in the dark glasses, and Lou Nissle, are doing their best.
