What candidate Maynard would do if she were No. f 2

By TIM RICHARD and SUE ROSIEK
"TID be an important part of the week.

IF ELECTED, she would be one heartheat away from the governor's chair. While gubernatorial nomines frizgerald is only 36 and in good health, the question was her own administrative experience.

"If someone said 'point to one thing," it would be the party's policy committee. I served as co-chair of that since its inception six years ago," Mrs. Maynard said.

The policy committee is an attempt to make the party platform a full-time grass roots effort instead of something slapped together by bigwigs in the heat of a quadrennial national convention.

Michigan Democrats pioneered the concept, and Mrs. Maynard is proud NOMINATED after intense pressure from the party's women's caucus, Mrs. Maynard said, "I don't consider myself a token. The campaigh isn't being run that way."

As evidence she cites the "careful, objective process' Fitzgerald used in interviewing potential candidates and talking to party leaders before asking her to be his running mate.

She predicts a Gov. Fitzgerald would repulsion incumbent William Milli-ken hasn't made enough.

If she differs from Fitzgerald on the politically sensitive issue of state-funded abortions, she argues, "A good administration can handle disagreement."

FITZGERALD'S overriding campaign theme has been business—busipaign theme has been business—businesses leaving the state, jobs being lost. Yet the Michigan Chamber of Commerce has given Pitzgerald's voting record in the State Senate a score of only 22.

"If you look at the chamber's ratings," Mrs. Maynard said, "The chamber rated on 16 issues, but only five were on business, and on only two votes did they say he was not right. "One was the auto lemon bill. That's a consumer bill—of interest to all records."

she said, "but he took Proctor & Camble into the modern age.
"He started a protit-sharing plan. In the depression, he guaranteed every employee who had worked for one year some work every week, and did a lot of other innovative management things."
What spare time she has is devoted to her three children, playing a little racogethall, sailing and "a lot of reading."

High court candidate blasts 'bench' law

The Michigan Supreme Court should stick to clarifying existing laws instead of creating new ones, said Justice James L. Hyan, who is socking relection Nov. 7. Hyan, who is socking relection Nov. 7. Hyan, a former Redford Township justice of the peace, told a recent gate reing of the Livoria Rotary Club that the courts in recent years have been getting into a reas where it has no business.

basiness.

The justice cited two recent examples: a lawsuit by a girl who wante to compete on an all-boys Little League learn and another by an Oakland Courty father whose infant was prohibited from using their apartment development's swimming pool because of a rule banning diapers in the water.

Ryan, nominated for re-election at the state Republican convention for the non-partisan post, said that the supreme court shouldn't act as a "super Legislature" or "super governor".

He stressed that the legislature, not the high court, should set public policy and priorities.

Ryan said that the public is getting wary and suspicious of the court setting public policy issues in private discussion.

"Our mission as a court is to dis

ner and apply it to the factual situation before the court," Ryan said. "While there must be growth in the law in our changing society, judges must avoid the temptation to legislate from the

It is the legislature's responsibility and duty to determine public policy and address issues of social engineer-ing, Ryan added. "The court is neither equipped nor authorized to assume those functions."
