OALES IWIANAGEIVIEN

Some of the things we look for in a candidate include:

Demonstrated leadership skills. Your ability to lead and molivate others might be indicated in any number of ways—through leadership positions you held in fraternities or sorofities, sports, student government or other campus activities while in college, in civic clubs or organizations; in the military, or through your current work experience.

A liking for competition and a desire to win. The men and women you will be competing with are high achievers. They're self-starters, resourceful, highly molivated. They like the sales almosphere because of the challenge.

Confidence in your own abilities. This means the kind of confidence that will let you start at an entry level position and compete for the chance to move up into management.

management. The training you'll receive and the opportunity for personal development will be exactly the same kind of training and opportunity given to every one or present Sales Managers when they started at the entry level. The rest is up to you, we promote only from within, on a basis of ment alone, without reference to time.

If this sounds like something that would give you more per-sonal satisfaction than your present work, and you believe your are qualified, send your resume to:
