Doctors, lawyers square off

cases tried by jury, the group is asking that a special three-member arbitration panel be established to hear the cases.

The panel would consist of one lawyer, one doctor and one impartial professional arbitrator. It is the doctor on the panel that especially irks Miller.

"In any other type of case, any other type in this country, the jurors are supposed to be impartial, not to have any prior feeling one way or the other on the case, and especially no financial interest in the outcome of the trial," he said.

"I'd be in favor of arbitration if my mother were on the panel, too."

THE WHOLE MESS of malpractice suits could be avoided if doctors would just be more careful, Miller said. Doctors are blaming the "victims," and the "victim's lawyers," he said, when they should instead be looking to their own practices.

According to statistics compiled by the physicians' committee, lawyers collect approximately 80 percent of each dollar spent on malpractice cases. But Miller said lawyers only get paid if the case is won, which isn't all that often.

Neither side is willing to give in, and the fight promises promises to be a long one.

Horsch said his group is just trying to get as many counter-malpractice suits filed against the lawyers as they can, and that the group is willing to appeal negative decisions as far as they have to.
