State Fair contest practice can begin

The Michigan State Fair again offers a family fun with a new series of children's contests for this year's event Aug. 24 through Sept. 3.

"The Fair is releasing the contest schedule now so families can plan ahead and start practicing," said William P. Uplina, State Fair Manager.

"Many of these contests and games take skill," Uplina said. "You can't just go out, toss eggs and blow bubbles and gulp pies without practice," he observed.

"It may be a little late to do much about preparing for the freckle contest, the look-alike twins and some of the others," the manager noted. "But come anyway. You just might win a prize."

All the contests will be held in the Kiddieland area of the Fairgrounds, except for the Largest Afro and Longest Ponytail, which will be in the Music Shell. Kids who want to enter should show up half an hour early to register, according to Harold Arnold, Director of Special Events for the Fair.

Little leaks mean big drains

A slowly dripping faucet can waste many gallons of water and more cash than anyone wants to spare.

In fact, faucets are the second greatest source of water leaks (toilets rank first). The American Water Works Association suggests you can save both natural and financial resources by checking all faucets in the house at least once a year.

Worn washers, the most common cause of leaks, are easy to replace. Turn off the water supply and then take apart the faucet. For more complicated fixtures, consult a good household do-it-yourself book.

Be sure that the new washer is the right size. It has to spread out to the edges of the valve stem when screwed down. You may need to consult a plumber if it still leaks.

Lever-controlled faucets are just as easy to disassemble and repair.

Repairing drippy faucets is one of the simple things homeowners can do to prevent unnecessary drains on water supplies and budgets.

Children under 12 may attend the state fair free when with an adult. Admission for adults is $3.

New peas are good for salads

New on the vegetable market are sugar snap peas with edible pods that are tender and sweet.

They may be served raw in salads or with a low-calorie dip. They can also be cooked or steamed in small amounts of water, or they are great for stir frying, says Lois Thieleke, Oakland County home economist. Avoid overcooking, because you want to serve them while still crisp.

These are different from snow peas, which are picked young when peas are barely visible in the pods. Sugar snap peas are picked when the peas are large and fully mature and the pods are round and full.

Sugar snap pea pods can be frozen to use at a later time. Recommended blanching time is 2 1/2 to 3 minutes. Cool promptly in cold water and drain. Pack into containers, seal, and freeze.

The pods are not recommended for canning. For additional information, contact the Food Preservation Hotline 658-0904, Oakland County Cooperative Extension Service.
