

Summer days just dog days!

On hot, humid days humans can take refuge in air-conditioned rooms, lakes, swimming pools or their favorite bar. But what about our canine pals? How do they beat the heat or quench their thirst? If dogs could talk, this hot-under-the-collar collie our photographer caught roasting would probably have a few words to say for the tailwagging set.

Maestro says 'old days' were tough

Lovers of classical music may take the high quality of today's long-playing recordings for granted, but not Eugene Ormandy, conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra since 1936.

In an interview with John and Susan Edwards Harvith, published by the Michigan Quarterly Review, a journal of the University of Michigan, Maestro Ormandy tells of the difficulties of recording in "the old days" and of his pleasure at hearing modern editions.

Before long-play recordings were introduced, Ormandy recalls, the 78 rpm technology allowed a maximum of four and a half minutes per side. This meant segmenting the score into small time intervals, which is not necessary now.

"I always say, the most important thing in music is the real, live performance of anything... if, for any reason, a person cannot listen to that live performance, then the next best thing is a good, really true recording of that work, of that performance."

"THE CONDUCTOR also believes that modern technology is capable of giving a faithful impression of his interpretations of music.

"In recording, a combination of four or five people is involved. They must feel the conductor's way; they must feel music the way I think I do, and I try to find out what they are looking for. The engineer, the producer and I discuss it beforehand, especially in the very beginning. Later on, it goes by itself. We discuss, for example, the balance. Now we know that the brass could kill any string section, no matter how large it is. So we have to watch all of that."

"I always tell them beforehand, and mark everything in my score, which they watch while I'm conducting. 'Watch the brass,' 'Percussion coming, be careful! Lower the percussion.' And even then, when the playback comes, I seldom feel that everything is just as I would like to have it. Then I make notes again with different color pencils, and the producer takes all of this back with him to New York, and he works on it."

'79 recession 'mild'—experts

The 1979 economic slowdown will be among the mildest of any recessions of recent record and should impose small costs on the economy, three University of Michigan economists predict.

By the same token, it is not expected to do much to reduce the nation's base inflation rate.

Prof. Saul H. Hymans and Harold T. Shapiro and research economist John M. Porter made this estimation in the release of their periodic update of the economic forecast made originally at the university's 26th annual Conference on the Economic Outlook last November.
