Flippin' pancakes lures the oldtimers

The Plymouth Kiwanis Club has reached the peak of its production for the annual pancake breakfast that is a major part of the Fall Festival. But it is proud of another record.

A check of the volunteer help that mans the various stoves or serves meals in Kellogg Park reveals that the Kiwanis has more real old-timers than others and their combined years of service at the Masonic Temple would amount to several centuries.

When Saturday morning arrives during the festival you will find such old-timers as Dean Saxton, Clarence Moore, Jim Houk, Leo Schultz, Matt Fortney, Bert Bates, Mel Blunk and Fred Faust on the job. They've been doing it for years.

"We started about two years after the Fall Festival was under way," Dean Saxton explained, "and we have been at it ever since. I don't know how long some of us can keep going, but we will be there, rain or shine, until we can't make it any more."

THE PEAK OF production was reached several years ago when 2,500 persons were served from early morning until early evening.

"That's all we can handle," Harold Fischer, another old-timer, remarked. "When you can make enough pancakes to feed 2,500 people with the facilities we have it is just about all you can do."

For the past several years some thought has been given to setting up facilities outdoors at the side of the Masonic Temple and use the motor home the Thursday Kiwanis uses, but the idea was abandoned.

It was agreed the pancakes was not an outdoor meal—that the cakes would get too cold to be appetizing when they reached the diner.

"What we need is more young fellows in the kitchen," Fischer commented. "But I doubt if they could do better than feed 2,500 hungry persons."

Regardless, the Kiwanis pancake breakfast is a traditional part of the Fall Festival and it is a sight to see the populace balance the syrup jars while covering the cakes and the links of sausage.
