Deadline for entries for the Plymouth Historical Museum's Amateur Photography Contest is Sept. 15.

The museum, at 155 S. Main St., Plymouth, will exhibit (from Sept. 20 to Sept. 30) all of the photographs received.

Categories are portraits, animals, scenery and sports, all 5 x 7 or larger, mounted or framed. Inquiries will be taken by calling the museum at 455-8940.

EVEN SMALL ADVERTISERS CAN GET THE MOST OUT OF THE OVERSEAS & EXCITING

which won the blue ribbon in the state fair competition, was shown to art show goers here last spring.

Alia Prain, who gave the cocktail party in Mrs. King's honor, thinks she will call her new painting "A thing of beauty is a joy forever."

The commissioned painting is a copy of an azalea plant Ms. Prain received as a gift from her employer, Sanford Berris, who is vice president of King Meadows in Ferndale.

"When you've lived as long as I have, you've seen a lot of azalea plants," Ms. Prain said, "and I've never seen one as lovely as this. I wanted it put on canvas because it truly is a thing of beauty."

J. Jordan Humberstone points out a few of the antiques in his home, the subjects of both his profession and his hobby, that he will share with those who are interested in investing in antiques when fall classes begin in the Farmington Community Center.

Class will tell how to invest in antiques

A six-session class called "Investing in Antiques" will begin Tuesday, Sept. 25, in the Farmington Community Center.

J. Jordan Humberstone, instructor for the classes, comes with an impressive list of credentials. He is on the acquisitions committee for Detroit Historical Museum and serves Greenfield Village as consultant, appraiser and teacher.

He teaches in Grosse Pointe War Memorial and at Village Women's Club in Birmingham.

The class in Farmington will cover the history and the value of American clocks, toys, Oriental rugs, quilts and coverlets, folk art and early lighting devices.

Each presentation will be illustrated with slides, and followed by class participation in a question and answer period.

Fee for the class is $30. The classes will run on Tuesdays, from 1-3 p.m. Registrations are being taken now in the center, at 24705 Farmington Road, or by calling the center at 477-8404.
