

Sargent's elegant people displayed at art museum

Turn of the century elegance comes to vivid life in the exhibition "John Singer Sargent and the Edwardian Age" which opens at the Detroit Institute of Arts, Wednesday, Oct. 17, and continues through Sunday, Dec. 9.

This is the exclusive North American showing of some 100 portraits, drawings and watercolors by the favorite artist of high society. The exhibition, organized jointly by the Detroit Institute of Arts and by the Leeds Art Galleries and London's National Portrait Gallery in England, opened to enthusiastic reviews in continental publications.

The exhibition includes resplendent full-length portraits, many of them lent from English country houses and not seen publicly for over half a century. Sargent (1856-1925) was the chronicler

American paintings exhibited in Midland

An exhibition of 95 oils by American painters of the Impressionist period will be at the Midland Art Council galleries at the Midland Center for the Arts through Nov. 4. Then it will go on a lengthy tour under the auspices of the International Exhibitions Foundation of Washington, D.C. The Midland galleries are open 1-5 p.m. Monday through Sunday and 7-9 p.m. Thursdays.

All paintings in the exhibition were assembled by Edith and Ellerton M. Jette for the Colby College Art Museum in Maine. Starting in 1962, they bought works by such well-known Boston artists as Gertrude Fiske and A. C. Goodwin. They also acquired, largely through the Vose Galleries in Boston, a large group of American Impressionists, all of excellent quality. Among them are: Edith Abigail Abbott, Frank Benson, Emil Carlsen, Robert Colman Child, William Closson, Walter Griffin, William Kaula, Mabel May Woodward and many others. For the most part, these artists belong to the second generation of American Impressionists whose rediscovery has only just begun. They were men and women of natural talent who expressed themselves in a fresh, indigenous American manner.

"American Painters of the Impressionist Period Rediscovered" brings together a group of painters whose artistic training was in the French Impressionist style. Bright colors with an emphasis on air atmosphere, and a suppression of details to the overall effect of the composition are the characteristics which are part of these artists' canvases. Just as the French Impressionists frequently painted landscapes and people pursuing the pleasures of life, so the Americans also painted these scenes which would best reflect the results of outdoor painting and a colorful, gay palette.

These works by 76 painters in the Impressionist style demonstrate the varied results derived from a similar artistic technique. Although their work is rarely exhibited today, they were popularly acclaimed artists when of late Victorian and Edwardian society and Rodin called him "The Van Dyck of our times."

The son of expatriate American parents, Sargent was born in Italy, learned his dazzling technique in the atelier of Carolus-Duran in Paris and cultivated his powers of characterization to the point where his sitters appear as real individuals rather than social stereotypes, despite their luxurious clothes and surroundings.

The early portraits he painted in France are subtle and sensitive. The impact of Impressionism, and of his friendship with Claude Monet in particular, can be traced in the vibrant landscapes and figure sketches done first in France and then in England during the 1890s.

Among the masterpieces in the exhibition are "Mrs. Carl Meyer and her Children" lent by Sir Anthony Meyer of London; "Edouard Pailleron" from the Musee National, Versailles; and "The Daughters of Edward D. Boit" from the Boston Museum of Fine Arts.

The exhibition is open to the public during regular museum hours: 9:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. Tuesday through Sunday (closed Mondays and Holidays). Admission is $2; senior citizens and students with ID #1; Children under 12 accompanied by an adult, and Founders members, no charge.

His popularity never again dwindled. He was sought out by Toward 1900, Sargent's patrons became increasingly aristocratic and he turned to Van Dyck and Reynolds for inspiration. His portraits of "The Acheson Sisters" and "A. J. Balfour" are in the great tradition of European portraiture but his daring interpretation of the notorious Mme. Gautreau, well known to society despite the title "Madame X," created such shock waves in France that he decided to leave Paris and relocate in London.
