

New Kmart opens doors

A new Kmart department store will open Nov. 1 at Commerce and Union Lake roads along the northwestern boundary of West Bloomfield.

The Commerce Woods store is one of 70 new Kmart stores that will open in the United States next month.

A Kroger supermarket also is under construction in the 12.4-acre development located in Commerce Township. A Burger King site plan was recently approved by Commerce planners for an area near the Union Lake-Commerce intersection.

Construction of the Kmart began earlier this year. The center is being developed by the Ramco-Gershenson Corp.

Plans for the Union Lake Kmart were first announced in 1973, but a dispute over the zoning of the property resulted in a lawsuit brought by the developers against Commerce Township.

An Oakland County Circuit judge in 1975 ruled in favor of commercial zoning of the property and the state court of appeals in 1977 upheld the lower court decision.

Commerce entered into an agreement with the developer that paved the way for approval of the Kmart plans in exchange for the developer's assurances that certain landscape amenities not required by the zoning ordinance would be observed.

The zoning lawsuit followed Commerce's refusal to issue a building permit for a Chatham supermarket.

After litigation was resolved, Chatham officials pulled out of the development, saying that the four-year delay and increasing construction costs would result in a higher rent than they expected.

pre-requisite for many mission organizations and secular vocations.

The school's Christian atmosphere, where chapel service is a daily requirement, extends beyond the campus. The admissions application forms ask prospective students if they smoke, drink, use non-prescribed drugs, dance or if they are divorced or separated. A yes to any of the questions requires a detailed explanation.

"WE'RE NOT trying to put our students in a straight-jacket," Woodburn said.

"We create the proper environment and hope they are circumspect in all they do," Dr. Johnson added.

"We try to encourage students to lead a life that would enable them to administer to people they are going to serve," said Williams. "If you are to be a spiritual leader, you have to prepare for it. Actions speak louder than words."

Some students said they don't mind the strict rules.

"I like the discipline of the school," said Melissa Colgrove, 18, a second year voice major from Pontiac.

Miss Colgrove lives with other female students in Livonia. She hopes to move into the new dorm next fall.

"I like it because there is always an other Christian around. You can always pray with someone," she added.

Wayne Kurtzyr, a 23 year old senior majoring in general Bible studies, is looking ahead to a teaching job.

He pays the $700 per semester tuition from money he gets from summer jobs. A resident of southwest Detroit and a 1974 Cody High School graduate, Kurtzyr said he was raised in a typical middle class family.

"I decided in 1972 that I would serve the Lord. The Bible College is the best way to fulfill that.

"I couldn't live by the guidelines if it was up to my own nature. But the Lord has taken over in that respect and kept me straight," he said.

er is affluent with a median income of $25,000 yearly. They are between 25-44 years old and probably have some sort of education beyond high school.

Most of Magnetic's cassette sales are in stores such as Macy's in New York. Their mail order business, begun to reach new customers, is beginning to switch over to buying the product in stores. It's a trend the company encourages.

In spite of inflation, the market for their luxury item has grown over the last year, according to Bay.

SALES ARE UP 60 per cent from last year. The company had projected a 100 percent increase but failed to take into account the quirks of the economy.

In addition to its American outlets, Magnetic has retailers in Canada, Venezuela, Hong Kong and European headquarters in London, England. They are looking toward Australia, Japan and Germany as new markets.

In spite of the booming business in videocassettes, the company also offers production facilities to commercial enterprises. Television commercials as well as in-house training films are made at the studios.

Usually the client will have a script prepared. Magnetic Video supplies the production staff and engineers to make the film.

Most of the projects are industrial such as marketing films for Chrysler Corp.

"There's not a lot of Hollywood here," said Bay.
