November is Community Center Month

Farmington Community Center's program director Virginia Ko-'chans (center) gives an informal tour of the building to visitors Jan Leitaeo (at left) and Norma Truxwell. The stairway leads to the sec-ond floor where classes are conducted daily, and the trip up is a favorite with those who appreciate the architecture of the past.

TO THE REAL PROPERTY AND ADDRESS OF THE PERSON OF THE PERS

It's business as usual for Marlene Coffey (third from left) who leads classes in the proper application of make-up. Ms. Coffey chooses the library, with its rich, dark panelling and its warm atmosphere for her "Pretty Faces" seminars.

Month-long celebration planned

November is Farmington Communi-ty Center Month, proclaimed as the center launches its second decade. The Longacre House, once the Lu-man Goodenough family homestead, was offered to the community 10 years ago after a successful fund-raising campaign. The building and grounds were refurbished, then opened as an ac-tivities and services center in the fall livities and services center in the fall of 1969.

The present month-long celebration gets under way with a Bowl-A-Thon in Farmington Lanes, which runs through Nov. 12, as a benefit for the center. Betty Schwehr, a longtime volunteer for the center and now its board of directors president, gives another of her Card Party Luncheous for the center's benefit on Friday, Nov. 2.

"A Tourist's Look at China," is set for Saturday, Nov. 10. Frances and Harold Gibson, who visited Chain 1976, head up this benefit with a Chinese dinner followed by tales of the Orient.

1978, head up this benefit with a Chi-nese dinner followed by talles of the Orient.

On Sunday, Nov. 11, the doors open to the public for an open house when Betty Palme, the center's new executive Betty Palme, the center's new executive the house and groundes outpelled the displays and performances of some of the activities that take place in the cen-ter.

THE FARMINGTON Community Center staff has chosen November to introduce a new event, a Book Fair, set for four days, Tunsday-Sunday, Nov. 29 to Dec. 2.

Center volunteers and staff for the December Santa Claus luncheons and boutiques spread out the events over two weekends now because of the over-flow crowd iast season, and they will add something new this year, a family ancake breakfast with Stant an O Sunday, the staff of the sta uning to appeal to every member of the family,"

She described her past 10 years as "an education." Still, she looks ahead with enthusiasm in planning for more growth in the areas of special events, trips and classes for the coming winter's session.

FARMINGTON COMMUNITY CENTER

The sign that now stands at the center's entrance, announcing coming events, was a gift from Farmington Area Jaycettes.

JUST PRIOR to the center reaching its 10th anniversary mark, the Michi-

"The design (of the building) reflects the influence of Marcus Burroughs, an outstanding Detroit architect, who de-veloped many large homes in the area," she said.

"It is regarded today as symbolic of a lifestyle in southern Oakland County during the first third of the 20th centu-ry."

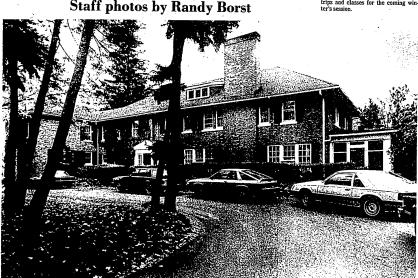

The lifestyle was affluent though not indicative of great wealth, but it was unique in this area and set an architectural style and cultural tone here. Today the house lends itself to meetings, lectures, art exhibits, flower shows, bridge parties, antique shows, arts and crafts shows and dance classes.

arts and cratts shows and dance class"Children and young people are attracted to the stairways and meandering baltways," Ms. Kochans said. "The dider citizens seem to take more pleasure in the spacious rooms and lovely grounds."

A board of 20 direct the center's actwittes in cooperation with the center's executive director. All board members are volunteers.

New center staff member Wanda Discher, (at left) is shown the authentic log cabin on the grounds, by Sharron Zamczyk, the center's public relations director. Elanor Spicer, whose family donated their home to the community, played and slept in the cabin when she was a child. The cabin has its own fireplace and, years ago, was equipped with specially-built child-sized furniture.

The center's gracious dining room is the choice of Betty Schwehr (standing) to lead her bridge students onto a better game. The bridge director is a long time center volunteer and now president of Month.

Every foot of available space is used in the building on Farmington Road, north of Ten Mile Road, with classes and special events listed on new brochures that are mailed out four times a year. Staff members work from one season to the next bringing culture and education mixed with leisure time activities and fun and games for residents' participation.

The inscription in the walk that overlooks the center's natural amphitheater reads: 'Oh Thou who has given me eyes to see and love this sight so fair, oh give me the heart to search for Thee, and find thee overwehere'.