Modern art explained at library's free program

"Do You Understand Modern Art?"

If not, the program asking the question may be the answer. The program is scheduled for 7:30 p.m. Thursday, Jan. 24 in the auditorium of Farmington Hills Community Library, 32737 12 Mile.

Esther Tarnoff, an artist and a member of the Detroit Institute of Arts Speaker's Bureau, will show a slide presentation and talk about contemporary art forms. There will be an opportunity for the audience to ask questions.

"Art has often been thought of as a rich man's toy," said Carole Hurd, speaking for the library's adult department, "but art can be enjoyed by everyone."

"A feeling for art awakens the senses and enables us to be more aware of the beauties of nature," she continued. "Understanding modern art will help us to be more responsive to all art and the various ways that artists have commented on the human experience throughout the ages."

Admission is without charge.
