You can become 'honest' hypnotist

As you leaf through the Detroit daily papers, you may notice the increasing number of advertisements recommending "registered hypnotists."

A friend of mine noticed one such ad recently that caught her eye because the "registered hypnotist" pictured there was a person she knew.

She had definite doubts about the authenticity of this person's claims. She checked into it, and — sure enough — the person was a registered hypnotist and had a framed certificate to verify it. However, this failed to satisfy my friend, and she decided to write to the Michigan Association of Professional Hypnotists and find out the requirements for registration.

BY RETURN MAIL, she received an application for registration and a letter requesting a registration fee of $25.

Although the application did not inquire into her education or her background in psychology, it did ask her to list two references who could attest to her ability to hypnotize.

Neither of these references she listed was ever contacted by the Michigan Association of Professional Hypnotists. They cashed her check and sent her a certificate — as easily as that.

The only reason that I have not registered my "enchanted" puppy dog, or my "charming" cat as hypnotists is that the Michigan Association of Professional Hypnotists has now raised — not its standards — but its registration fee. It now costs $50 to buy a certificate.

LET ME WARN you: If you want to be hypnotized for any reason, ask your doctor to recommend a qualified psychologist or psychiatrist to help you.

Don't trust your sanity to a "registered hypnotist."

One such person in the Detroit area even advertises for you to bring your children in for her to work with, so that she can develop their psychic powers.

CONFIDENTIAL TO JOAN K.: I read your 16-page letter in which you describe all the problems you are having with your husband. You asked that I send you a spell, but you did not include your return address.

Also, you did not specify what kind of spell you wanted. From your letter, I cannot tell whether you want a love spell, to make him settle down and stay with you; an alcoholic spell, to discourage his drinking; or a money spell, to increase your finances, and enable you to leave him.

Please write again, and be more specific.
