A dress for a wedding and later

By RUSTLE SHAND
Mary McFadden's timeless, versatile ivory suit inspires thoughts of an informal daytime wedding and then goes on and on.

Equally perfect for the sophisticated young bride or the more mature, perhaps second-time-around bride, the silk linen suit promises to become a wardrobe staple, making it a wise investment.

For the wedding ceremony, the bride carries a single red rose and wears a headpiece of gold flowers that dip onto the cheek.

After the ceremony, and for future cocktail parties, she removes the jacket. For a going-away suit, she removes the ivory silk pleated tunic and dons a colorful silk blouse under the jacket.

For casual honeymoon jaunts she can top the slim silk linen ivory skirt with a navy blazer. For dinner and dancing she will wear silk trousers with the camisole top tunic.
