Suit yourself in sand, clay, bronze, deep ivory

Calvin Klein's Spring '79 collection strives for an essence of timeless, easy American good looks. His strength lies in choices of color and fabric.

Earth tones of sand, deep ivory, clay and bronze are all big hits, as are the darks of navy and black.

Klein's suiting tweeds come in cotton and linen, wool, cotton and linen, and all linen. Their proportions slimmed and narrowed are no more remarkable than his ultimate evening look — charmeuse.

The youngest American designer ever elected to the Fashion Hall of Fame loves the look of suits worn with a shirt and tie or just a sweater. His sportcoats are unconstructed and ventless. He teams them with shirts made of Egyptian cotton, handkerchief linen or lightweight oxford. Or cotton damask. He makes a crew neck button front shirt both in cotton damask and cotton knit.

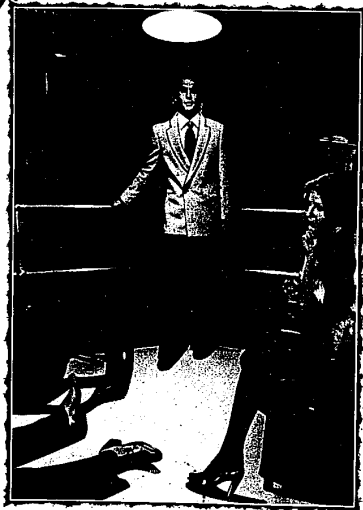

Klein's sweaters are crowd-pleasers. Heavy cotton string knits are box stitched and ribbed. There are boat necks, V-necks and three button crew neck in shades of cream, bronze, stone and navy. There are also cotton
