"My clothes are romantic" said Sydney Corvin Milliken of her new spring-summer collection of dresses and suits designed to take a woman through the entire day and on through the dinner hours.

The Milliken designs are romantic in a soft, feminine, yet lively mood. "They are not ruffy and fussy," she said.

Milliken, who has been designing for about 10 years, was making her first personal appearance in the Midwest. Although her designs are carried by major New York fashion stores and many important high fashion boutiques throughout the country, she chose Claire Pearene's Somerset Mall shop for the premier showing of her spring line.

She said she found the face-to-face experience with Detroit customers very informative.

"I learned that women really don't want to expose themselves," she said, referring to the current exhibition of bareness being shown in New York.

"Women feel much more secure with some covering while still achieving a sexy look."

Her romantic clothes, she said, are a return to the design concept of Schiaparelli, Balenciaga and Givenchy, who consistently designed for the woman who would wear their clothes.

"I had recently seen some Schiaparelli clothes that were so inspiring," she said. "My spring-summer collection reflects a romance with the romantic."

Ms. Milliken's clothes are colorful, soft and sensuous, blended with exquisite Italian floral prints. Matte jersey, she said, is her favorite fabric because it flows softly over the body without clinging to it.

Her customers, she said, range in age from 18 to 75.

"She is one who invests in clothing to be worn more than one year," said Ms. Milliken. For this reason, she does not "go in for trends."

For example, she said, although they are showing very short skirts in Europe, "I do not believe they will take hold here. My skirt lengths fall four inches below the knee, just covering the fullness of the calf of the leg."

Prices of Milliken's outfits range from $150 to $400.

Milliken's dinner dressing includes chiffon print separates in shades of hot pink. Already popular in the East, she is just now being introduced in the local area by Claire Pearene, Somerset Mall.
