

Green room — revisited

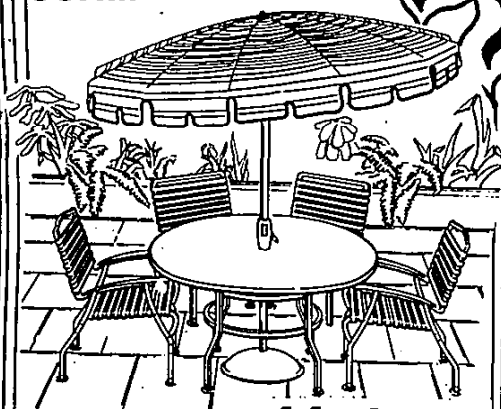

Mike and Mary Pulick both love growing things. But they had to be practical in their desire to continue their hobby on a year-round basis.

The decision to add a "green room" to their home last year rather than an all-glass greenhouse was for resale purposes. They wanted the addition to look more like part of the house just in case the next family who moves in aren't flower enthusiasts.

After the green room was up and Mike finished off the inside, the couple got busy and did a few more things to the exterior. One was to add a redwood deck in a secluded corner that was partially formed by the extension. Then all the flowers they grew in the house during the winter made their summer debut for an outstanding show of color and variety. A repeat performance of last summer's spectacular is scheduled for this year with a few vegetables — off to one side — joining the show.
