Floyd, whose record is 11:14 in his professional career, dominated the first four rounds, landing an occasional punch but never staggering Hoye. Floyd was the more aggressive of the two boxers but seemed to tire in the later rounds. Hoye had trouble with his footwork in the first two rounds and slipped to the canvas three times. "I had new shoes on and couldn't get many good punches off," said Hoye aft-erward. "There was no rosin in the iner".
