

New from Porsche

The Audi 4000 goes on sale in Porsche+Audi dealerships this month. The 4000, smaller than the existing 5000, combines an 34 mpg mileage rating with an over-sized fuel tank to deliver a cruising range of more than 500 miles.

Driving needn't be a gas

There are ways — intriguing and promising — of stretching gasoline with mixtures, including water, or replacing it with electricity.

or replacing it with electricity.

Any-minute technological breakthroughs — to quote their inventors — may take the whimsy out of still other alternatives to gasoline and the interal combustion engine.

There's pig power. There's a windup car. There's putting tequila in your tank. There's woodpile propulsion. There's zero-cents-a-gallon sunshine.

According to one researcher, "There's massive evidence that the best motor fuel by far is plain old torgut mountain moonshine." But putting tequila or the like in your tank is touchy. A Frenchman said apple brandy gave his car the gallops, but red wine gammed up the carburgler.

spite transity gave in sea, the gamby, but red wine gummed up the earburetor. Successful tests also have been made of homo-genized water and gasoline, though cars need spe-cial emulsifying equipment.

ELECTRIC CARS still await the super battery that will assure trips of more than 40 to 75 miles without a recharge.

Diesel engines, long admired by engineers, may be coming into their own due to their superior mileage. Other gas-guzler alternalives:

Steam — powerful, but cars need better boiler-heating fuel; sunshine — Naval Academy students built a battery car that draws electricity from photovoitaic cells spread across the hood; coal — one inventor says a pound of pwwdered coal powers his modified car 10 miles, wood — carbon monoxide and other gases fuel cars efficiently, but gas-generating burners in the trunk restrict driving too far from woodpiles;
Nuclear — a 3,000-pound car woould need 40 tons of engine and radiation shielding; flywsheels — may run a car on as little as a cent a mile, but need a high-spin windup perhaps every 50 miles. — may run a car on as little as a cent a mile, but need a high-spin windup perhaps every 50 miles. Horse and buggy — no longer as cheap to operate as the 2% cents a mile of 1910;
Manure — 100 pounds from pigs, cattle or chickens, distilled and producing methane gas, may be the equivalent of 30 miles on a gallon of gasoline. — "The Texas cattle country," said one manure-power fan, "many be tomorrow's Kuwait."

Good news for Americans suffering through their love affair with the automobile: There are legal ways to beat gas-guzzler taxes aimed at cutting the nation's gasoline consumption.

Some unconventional fuels and cars have proven get-up-and-go galore. Ourher ways to beat the taxes perhaps are just being born in chemistry labs and home workshops.

MANY MAY PROVE to be like the 100-mile-gallon carburetor or like the power pill dropped in the gas tank that turns water to gasoline — both apparently only machine shop spectualition. In 1917, Alexander Graham Bell proposed an al-ternative fuel, "Alcohol makes a beautiful, clean and efficient fuel, and where not intended for con-sumption by human beings, can be manufactured very cheaply in an indigestible or even poisonous form."

form."
Today, experiments blend alcohol with as little as 72 percent gasoline. The mixture is called gasohol and improves mileage.
