SOMETHING FOR EVERYONE AT MICHIGAN STATE FAIR

Bring the children with you to the state fair in Detroit, September 2-11. They will learn much of value to them and to you.

Women visitors to the state fair in Detroit, September 2 to 11 will find as much to interest them as will the men.

Whatever you are interested in you will find it at the Michigan State Fair in Detroit, September 2-11.

STATE FAIR FOSTERING BEE-KEEPING INDUSTRY

The bee-keeping industry is one of the growing lines of business in Michigan, more and more interest being taken in it annually by farmers and others. There are many more bees in Michigan at present than most people imagine. The state fair, which will have a splendid apiculture display next Sept. 2-11, has done much to foster this industry and is aiding in every possible way to increase it. E. B. Tyrrell, of Detroit, former secretary of the National Bee Keepers' Association, will be superintendent of the apiculture division and will show all visitors to the fair how an expert handles bees. Mr. Tyrrell has one swarm of bees already that he took off the office wall adjoining the state fair offices in downtown Detroit late in May. It has been making honey at the fair grounds ever since.

ONLY TUBERCULIN-FREE CATTLE AT STATE FAIR

All cattle presented for exhibition at the Michigan state fair in Detroit, September 2-11, must either be from a tuberculin-free accredited herd, or shall have passed a satisfactory tuberculin test and found to be free from tuberculosis not more than ninety days prior to the opening date of the fair.

This is an official ruling and applies also to all fairs held in Michigan. The cattle exhibit at the state fair will be in personal charge of H. W. Norton, Jr., state livestock sanitary commissioner, and successor in that position of E. H. Halladay, state commissioner of agriculture and chairman of the board of managers of the state fair.
