

CONDENSED CLASSICS

ALL SORTS AND CONDITIONS OF MEN

By WALTER BESANT

Condensation by Charles H. Lincoln

Sir Walter Besant, novelist and biographer, lover of London and of the poor folk who lived in the slums of the British metropolis...

to what they would do with her money, if they had the opportunity. The cabinet-maker, Harry, had ideas. He had observed a lack in the life of the East End of London...

THE girl was the greatest heiress in England. On the morrow she was to leave the university where, in anticipation of the responsibility of her fortune, she had acquired all the theory of political economy...

"To begin with, there is the brewery. You cannot escape from a big brewery if it belongs to you. You cannot hide it away."

Marsden & Company's Stout, their XXX, their Old and their Special Reserve, their Family Alea (that particularly at eight-and-six the nine-gallon cask, if paid for on delivery), their drays, their huge horses, their strong men—these things stare one in the face wherever you go."

Yet Angela Messenger never had been inside one of her own houses. Never had visited her brewery. She knew all the theories about people, but she didn't know people themself. She resolved:

"I efface myself. I vanish. I disappear. Your Angela will be a dressmaker, and what she will live by herself and become—what her great grandmother was one of the people."

This was in June, 1881.

For a long time to come, fashionable London would see Angela Messenger no more.

But in Whitechapel district, a charming young woman claiming the name of Kennedy appeared from nowhere in particular, to open dressmaking rooms.

At Mrs. Bormalack's boarding house she met the man.

The man had all of personal refinement, education and aristocratic poise that was to be expected in the favorite member of the family of Lord Jocelyn Le Breton.

Reaching the age of twenty-three, he had been told of the day of his birth: his only claim upon that home of wealth and social distinction was one of gratitude. For, in truth, he had been the child of a sergeant in the English army; and instead of Le Breton, his name was Gossett—Harry Gossett, the first being pronounced 'Arry in the neighborhood where he had been born.

Free to make his own choice, he resolved to go back to his old people.

Mrs. Bormalack's boarding house was old and worn.

The boarders numbered an elderly couple from a New Hampshire town, hugging the delusion that they were rightful owners of a peerage, and awaiting the day when their rights would be recognized; a slight-of-hand performer out of employment, who bowed his fellows by practicing his magic upon them; a learned scholar from Australia, who claimed the discovery of the original tablets of stone upon which the Ten Commandments had been written, but who was depicted of the glory due such an achievement by the jealousy of rival scholars; a clerk in the great brewery, who for thirty years had labored under suspicion of stealing certain valuables from a safe of the Concern—holding on to an ill-paid position through the decades, without hope of promotion or fear of discharge; and a guilt might be proven of the missing valuables discovered.

In such surroundings, Angela and Harry naturally gravitated toward each other. Without question, they took to each other at once.

Their talk naturally would come around to the wealthy Miss Messenger—whom none of those concerned with the story except Miss Kennedy ever had seen. They would speculate as to what they would do with her money, if they had the opportunity. The cabinet-maker, Harry, had ideas. He had observed a lack in the life of the East End of London, with its two millions of people. "We have no pleasure; a theater and a music hall in Whitechapel Road. That has to serve for the millions of people. Now if this young heiress wanted to do any good, she should build a Palace of Pleasure here."

"Let us talk over your Palace of Pleasure," she said.

And as they talked over his elaborated and amplified the idea, as the needs of the people among whom they lived became more apparent to them. To him it was a fanciful idea, largely of interest because it gave him opportunity to talk with the little heiress-maker.

To her it was the opportunity for which the greatest heiress in England had gone searching in Whitechapel.

But first came the "Stepney Dressmakers' Association." Never before had London seen such a business, conducted upon such extraordinary principles. The young women employees actually were encouraged to leave their work at certain hours, to exercise in the parks, to visit the fashionable shopping food at the expense of the shop. Lawn tennis courts were provided for them. In the evenings, they were encouraged to dance and sing. And a share of the earnings of the establishment was theirs.

Miss Kennedy's bucker in this venture was supposed to be the wealthy Miss Messenger of the brewery. The young cabinet-maker, already deep in love with the dressmaker, suggested that Miss Kennedy might possibly be Miss Messenger to start the Palace of Delight, as he now called it.

"What is a Palace of Delight," he was asked.

"Truly wonderful! It is," said Harry, "to think how magnificent are the gifts and bequests of rich men. Schools, churches, almshouses, hospitals—that is all; that is their monotonous round." Then he proceeded to give his imagination full sway in a description of the things that he had in the time being, to be become a wonderful reality through the magic of the Messenger millions.

While the Palace was growing, Miss Kennedy, through her supposed influence with Miss Messenger, was bringing sunshine into the lives of the poor folk of Mrs. Bormalack's boarding house. The seekers for a passage were set up in the Messenger mansion in the city, and had a taste of all that the great heiress had. The discoverer of the Tablets of Stone had his discovery put into a book, and was sent home to Australia glowing with joy and pride. The slight-of-hand man was given opportunity to prove his skill and proposed marriage in return. All this through the dressmaker's "influence" with the heiress of the brewery.

The young cabinet-maker, for his part, found the long-sought valuables and freed the old clerk from the suspicions he had labored under for thirty years. At the same time, Harry discovered proof that he himself was a fully well-to-do person.

He had his own fortune at the feet of the dressmaker. The day for the wedding was set.

All this time, he remembered, the young man had no liking of the girl's identity; nor did he know of her magnanimous Palace. But that was taking form in brick and stone. The girl, however, had long since discovered the secret of Harry's life.

Harry saw his Palace of Delight only when all was completed. It contained a great variety of things, and couples could dance without crowding. On wet days it was to be a playground for children. There was a concert room, with organ and piano and parlors; rooms for painting, drawing, wood-carving; and all manner of small arts.

"In the Palace of Delight," said Angela, "we shall not be like a troop of revellers, thinking of nothing but food and soap and fastenings; but we shall all learn something every day. We shall all belong to the same class. It is our own palace, the club of the working people; we will not let anybody make money out of it. We shall use it for ourselves, and we shall make our enjoyment by ourselves."

The first notes of the great organ of the Palace were the wedding march of the girl and the man: The first festivities within the walls attended their wedding feast.

And still the man whose imagination had given birth to these marvels had never guessed that his bride was anything but what she seemed.

"The truth came to him only when, in the great city, he came to his no longer clad as a simple dressmaker, but radiant in white satin, myriads of flowers, with white veil and white fountains, and round her wrists through a necklace of sparkling diamonds, and diamonds in her hair.

"Take her, my boy," said Lord Jocelyn proudly. "But you have married—no Miss Kennedy at all—but Angela Messenger."

Harry took his bride's hand in a kind of ecstasy.

"Forgive me, Harry," she said, "say you forgive me."

Then he raised her veil and kissed her forehead before them all. But he could not speak because his eyes were filled with the tears of a man whose mind was mired upon what his brain in a great wave, and he would fain have been alone.
