HUGE DEPARTMENT BACKS STATE FAIR

NEW DEPT. OF AG. CULTURE INCLUDES FULLY 10 STATE ACTIVITIES.

COMMISSIONER H. LADAY'S FORCE COVERS BIG FIELD

One of the principal and most far-reaching reorganizations of state departments and bureaus accomplished by the last legislature was that which resulted in the creation of the state department of agriculture. This new department includes the Michigan State Fair, the commissioner of agriculture being, ex-officio, chairman of the board of managers of the fair.

The new alignment means that the State Fair now will have the complete backing and active aid of all the varied off-ials and bureaus that come under the department of agriculture. To realize the importance of that backing and what it will mean in the continued development of Michigan's great state fair, already ranked as the best in all America, one has but to view the ramifications of this new department of agriculture. The coming fair in Detroit, September 2-11 will be the first to feel the benefits of the arrangement.

The state department of agriculture now consists of a general department, with four main bureaus, or subdivisions. Included in these are fully forty various activities.

Heading the department is the commissioner of agriculture; H. H. Halladay, former Commissioner of Animal Industry, having the honor of being the first commissioner. Working directly with him is his private secretary and his deputy commissioner, with a chief clerk in charge of general office work, bookkeeping, filing, stenographic work, etc.

The commissioner and deputy commissioner have general charge over the four bureaus into which the department is sub-divided. These are the bureaus of agricultural development, food and drugs, animal industry and dairying. Each of these bureaus has its own director.

The director of agricultural development has under his charge all matters affecting immigration to Michigan; settlement of lands; state and county fairs; preparation and dissemination of agricultural statistics; land problems of all sorts; drainage throughout the state; orchard and nursery inspection; and apian inspection.

The director of the food and drug bureau has charge of food inspection; drug inspection; weight and measure; fertilizer inspection; feeding urea; inspection; insecticides and fungicides inspection; and seed inspection. Also, through the chemical laboratory attached to his bureau, with an expert chemist in control, all chemical and bacteriological analyses are made for the entire department of agriculture.

The director of the bureau of animal industry has charge of state farms and herds and of appraisals; and other business matters connected with the Bureau; the veterinary division, which includes a chief veterinarian and assistant who look after all veterinary activities; act as the chairman of the board for veterinarians and as the station board, make slaughter house and meat inspections and co-operate generally with the federal bureau along these lines.

The director of the bureau of dairying has charge of all market milk inspection; creamery and cheese factory inspection; condensed and powdered milk factory inspection; and ice cream plant inspection.

As a whole, it is anticipated that the co-ordination of all these lines in one department will mean far more efficient endeavor and concrete results. The state fair will be the mirror in which will be reflected the activities and the accomplishments of the entire department.

WILD LIFE EXPOSITION AT COMING STATE FAIR

Under the supervision of the state department of conservation, John Baird, director, a complete wild life exposition will be put on at the state fair in Detroit September 2 to 11. Ground space has been set apart for this splendid feature, which will be of interest to every nature lover, sportsman and fisherman who visits the fair.

Wild animals native to Michigan will be shown in places set aside for each variety, the specimens being brought to the fair grounds from the state game preserves. They will include deer, bear, foxes, wolves and many varieties of smaller animals.

Fish native to Michigan waters also will be shown in a big aquarium and will be especially interesting to those who have never had the opportunity to see more than a few of the many varieties of fish that swim the lakes and rivers of the state.

Like the other exhibits at this year's fair, the educational possibilities of this wild life exposition will be utilized and the visitors to the fair will feel the chance to learn from experts how the animals of the state live when they are free to roam the woods and fields.
