It is not always easy to find a leafy bower with a clean, level place on which to spread the lunch, and besides, it is vastly more comfortable and less bothersome to eat in the car. To add to the comfort and convenience of such trips, the very light and compact folding table shown in the drawing is carried along. The frame is made of 1½ by ¾-inch whitewood, in two parts, which are hinged at the middle, while the legs are hinged to one section and joined together near the lower end with a brass plate. The frames are covered with extra thick pressboard, or wallboard, glued to the wood. Leather tabs are provided at each end, which are attached over the top-curtain fasteners on the edge of the car. The whole is painted or varnished as desired, to make it waterproof and to improve the appearance.—A. G. Rollins, Portland, Me., in Popular Mechanics Magazine.
