INTRODUCING MR. WHIPPLE.

Franklyn Whipple of Honor, came to Farmington last week to assume the position as editor-manag of The Enterprise. Mr. Whipple is an experienced newspaper man and printer and comes well recommended as a man and a citizen. As soon as he can arrange matters Mrs. Whipple will also come to Farmington and the Whipples will become residents of the village. Any favors the people of this section may be able to extend to Mr. Whipple will be appreciated by The Enterprise. He has come to give this community a good newspaper and he will be glad to co-operate with all the interests in this section to advance the growth and upbuilding of Farmington.

MUSCLE SHOALS.

Of late more or less and mostly more, has been printed and read regarding the Muscle Shoals proposition. Especially since Henry Ford contemplated and made the government an offer to take over and operate the plant. While the average citizen is no wise qualified to judge whether Ford's offer is a good thing in a business way for the government or not, it is a fact that ever since the offer was made the fertilizer has been expended a lot of money getting propaganda into the hands of the public, assailing the Ford proposal.

That the efforts of the trust are beginning to bear fruit is evident. If the trust is as patriotic as it would have the public believe through the literature sent out, why should the outfit object to the farmer securing commercial fertilizer at a low price which claims would be the case if Ford is allowed to take over what has been so far a valuable white elephant on the hands of the government. Really, without prejudice, there is suspicion of a dark lurking in the wood-pile.

FRED M. WARNER—CITIZEN AND NEIGHBOR.

There is not a resident in this whole section who is not proud of Farmington's new and exceedingly handsome and commodious bank building, which will be formally opened to the public on Saturday—tomorrow. The new building is a very great credit to its builders and would be a handsome addition to the business institutions of any city, no matter what its size. It is also a distinct credit to the officers and directors of the bank and is a fine manifestation of their faith in the future growth and development of Farmington and the country surrounding the village. These gentlemen have planned well and the completed structure is one of the most complete and modern banking buildings to be found in the state, and but very few towns the size of Farmington can claim such a well-equipped and commodious banking house. Nothing has been spared to make the new structure sufficient to meet the needs of the bank for years to come and if Farmington should grow to become a large city—we expect it will—its citizens will still be able to point with feelings of pride to its bank building.

As citizens of Farmington we may well rejoice that the men who are directing the affairs of the Farmington State Savings Bank have planned and wrought such a handsome home. These men have given liberally of their time to advance the interests of the business section of the town and they have built it better than they know, for the wonderful change that has been made in the appearance of the business street would not have been imagined by the most enthusiastic citizen of the community. And while we are anxious to sing the praises of the board of directors and the stockholders of the bank because they gave hearty and unstinted endorsement of the building program; yet we believe it is only fair and just to speak a personal word of commendation of the one man of this group of splendid, far-seeing citizens, who was directly responsible for the erection of this building, and to whose enterprise and non-partisan interest the structure is a fitting memorial. We refer to Fred M. Warner, a fellow-citizen, and a neighbor to every resident of Farmington.

Mr. Warner's busy life has been spent in Farmington and he is proud of this community as "home." Unlike a great many men who have acquired a competency and who have been honored by the people far above many of his fellows, he has not sought a larger field nor moved to a larger community, but he has been content and happy to remain here with his old friends and neighbors and to work with them in an effort to advance the best interests of the "home town."

While governor of our great state Mr. Warner was always pleased to refer to the fact that he came from one of the smallest farming communities of our great commonwealth, to the upbuilding and advancement of which he has given so generously of his time and very best thought and energy. Every worthy cause has received his encouragement and support.

He has not been selfish in his planning for Farmington, because he has desired that the whole community might be benefited by the effort made to advance the interests of this section. He has interested himself in our schools, serving for years on the board of trustees; he has worked efficiently for the improvement of our streets and highways; he has labored in season and out of season to advance the farmer and dairy interests of this whole community, until it has become one of the recognized dairy sections of Detroit's great area.

Neighborly and easy of approach he has been just a common man among a lot of other common people. Warm-hearted and generous, he has been a true friend to many in this community, and the kind feeling which Farmington people manifest toward Mr. Warner is shared by people in all sections of the state.

Mr. Warner expects to leave soon with Mrs. Warner for California, where they will spend a few months in the hope that the change will prove beneficial to his health. His neighbors and friends in Farmington will await his return with pleasure and their best wishes will accompany him to the land of sunshine and flowers. That he may speedily be restored to health and vigor is the sincere wish of the people of this entire section.

Emerson at College.
He found there but little instruction suited to his appetite, and strayed off, though with some misgivings, to other pastures. In one of his journals long afterwards, he speaks of "the instinct which leads the youth who has no facility for mathematics, and weaves over the impossible analytical geometry, to console his defeat with Chaucer and Montaigne, with Plutarch and Plato at night." In his own way he was industrious; feeling vaguely that, for him, power of expression was more important than philological or scientific training—James Elliott Cabot.

Shortening a Leather Belt.
If you want to shorten a leather belt instead of cutting or boring a hole, neither of which is satisfactory, heat a knitting needle or hat pin red hot and punch it through. This can be done also in shortening the belt of a sewing machine if it breaks inopportunistly.

Somewhat Peculiar.
In 1820, it is recorded by an English magazine, Edward Smith died at the age of seventy-five years, and that until a few years before his death it was his constant practice to ride upon a bull, and instead of smoking tobacco he had his hay salted and smoked it instead of that plant.

The comfortable riding qualities of the Overland can be compared only with those of higher priced cars, for its spring base is 130 inches long—longer than the wheel base of most large heavy cars.

Its 27-horsepower motor drives the Overland farther on a gallon of gas than any other car. Owners report 25 miles is common.
