Later Cutting of Alfalfa Found to be Better Practice

Delaying the cutting of alfalfa until it is nearly in full bloom has been found a better practice than mowing it soon after blooming starts. Trials made by the United States department of agriculture and state experiment stations indicate that yield is larger over a period of years and that the life of the stand is prolonged by delaying harvesting it till the plants are nearly in full bloom.

Hay made when the plants are nearly in full bloom possibly is not quite so palatable, but this is offset by the gain in the quantity of hay. The fields that were cut prior to or at the beginning of blooming showed a tendency to die out sooner. Cutting a crop late in the fall so that not enough growth was left for protection in the winter also had much to do with thinning stands. The department recommends that alfalfa be given time to reach a height of 6 to 8 inches before cold weather shuts off the sap flow.

In the past the growing of alfalfa in rows in dry regions has been recommended, but experimental evidence gathered by the department in the last few years shows that, with the exception of a few rare varieties, the seed of which sells for a high price, this method is seldom practical. Where the rainfall is not sufficient to grow alfalfa, broadcast stands it cannot usually be grown profitably in rows. A slightly larger yield may be produced, but not enough to pay for the added expense. Also hay harvested on this cultivated ground is apt to be dirty and it is hard to cut and load.

Accumulated experience also has exploded some old notions about the value of cultivation of broadcast stands. It has been found that harrowing a field of alfalfa ordinarily does not increase the yield; neither does it prolong the life of the stand to any noticeable extent. The notified spring-tooth harrow does not injure the plants, but the disk often kills many and reduce the stand. Some sort of cultivator or weeder, ad- visable in irrigated regions where the water carries a great deal of silt or where the soil has been compacted by the tramping of cattle pastured on the alfalfa. The department believes there is usually little to be gained by cultivating broadcast fields when the stand is good. If weeds and grass work in and reduce the stand it is better to plow up the field and put in another crop for a year or two. It is hard to thicken a thin stand by cultivating in and sowing more seed; in fact, it is a waste of time, the department believes.
