

The Laborer

There is nothing degrading about honest labor. In fact the honest, dependable workman is America's greatest asset today.

But the laborer is worthy of his hire. He should have living wages, and more than a living wage, too. We heartily believe that, but still more is to be said. The laborer, in order to attain comforts and advantages, should not only labor at good wages, but should also learn to save. If he does not do that, even with good wages there will come times when his lot will be unfortunate. We invite the accounts of laboring men and will give their business every attention, no matter how small the account.
