YOUR AUTOS ELECTRICAL SYSTEM
The Generator on Your Car

The first generators made for supplying current to the storage batteries on automobiles, were adapted from the generators used at that time on Pullman cars which were belted to the axle on one of the trucks and supplied current to the car lighting batteries. They suggested the line of development for a satisfactory battery to keep the automobile storage battery charged by use of power from the car's own engine.

The first generators produced for automobile charging were the products of the Willard Storage Battery company and proved very successful from the start. They were made to attach to various places on the frame of a car and were driven either by a friction drive, wheel, silent chain or a V-shaped belt.

One of the earliest problems in connection with automobile lighting was the need of some form of regulator to hold the generator to some definite charging rate through all the speeds at which the car might be driven. This was necessary to avoid the dangers of undercharging and overcharging while running at slow or high speeds, respectively.

In co-operation with several well known engineers, Mr. T. A. Willard, president of the Willard Storage Battery company, devised a method to control the charging rate of such generators that has been generally accepted by most manufacturers of such equipment. The common "third brush" type of regulation was the result of the work of these men and has been used successfully ever since.

River's Freakish Movement.

The Cumberland river has the distinction of leaving its home state and entering it again. It flows through the eastern and south-central part of the state, then turns south into Tennessee, but farther west enters Kentucky again and joins the Ohio a few miles east of the mouth of the Tennessee river.

Her Vision.

A wealthy woman of fifty was told that her husband was in love with his stenographer. "You can see it yourself," they told her. She replied: "No, I cannot see it. A young woman or a blind woman might see it; but I am fifty and I am not blind. I know what not to see."—Charleston News and Courier.
