For those who prefer elegant occupants in their garages, Cadillac convertable limossines from 1970 and four-door Lincolns from the '69°s are marketable.

But collectable cars are an individualistic predilection, Donoghue continued.

while there are persons who collect obscure cars like Mitchells made in Grand Rapids, there are those who buy Studebakers.

"The Studebaker appeals to persons with a certain kind of taste. It's style wasn't timeless," Donoghue begins wasn't timeless, Donognuc tactfully.

"It didn't hold the road well, it wasn't made well," he added.
But some persist in collecting the car, which spent most of the "50's, until its demise, being looked down at.

FOR THOSE who have a car which may be collectable but which needs some restoration, Donoghue advises owners to forgoe plastering those rust spots with Bondo.

The quality of the restoration is in proportion with the price the car can command, he said. But owners shouldn't restore an old car expecting to make a profit by selling it. Most of the time the cost of a fine restoration job exceeds the total value of the verification.

"Don't restore it to sell. Restore it for youself," he said.

Some restorations can cost between $20,000 and $20,000 and
