"Many rabbis and leaders from indi-vidual Humanistic Judaism congrega-tions will be addressing the topics of religious inter-marriage and conver-sion," according to Miriam Jerris, president of the international organiza-tion.

"Intermarriage has long been rejected by the Jewish establishment as it represents a 'dilution' of traditional beliefs. Our feeling is that these beliefs are founded in life styles which no longer apply," she says.

Humanistic Judaism has congregations in Illinois, Connecticut, Massachusetts, Ontario, California, Florida and New York.
