Mercury Capri was introduced 10 years ago. The imported car was touted for its sporty European styling and high-performance engineering. More than 594,000 have been sold since the Capri's introduction

11 percent gas savings probable with tuneup

If you're planning to travel by car this summer, you'd be wise to pay special attention to the tune of your engine before beginning your trip.

Engine tuneup becomes even more important and a greater value as gasoline prices continue to increase.

The Consumer Automotive Advisory Council says cars in need of a tuneup show an average of 11 percent improvement in gasoline mileage after they are tuned up. That's quite a savings at today's gasoline prices.

The pocketbook considerations are, however, only part of the story. Quicker starting, smoother running and better performance are added benefits of a good tuneup.

THESE FACTORS frequently are affected by emission controls. Owners of late model cars should be aware of the presence of these components on their engines.

While they contribute to significantly reduced air pollution, they should be serviced as part of a tuneup to maintain your car's clean exhaust and efficient operation.

Something as simple as a leaking vacuum hose can cause rough idle and poor performance. Other emission control components aren't quiet as simple.

Diagnosis and adjustment often requires an experienced, well-equipped mechanic. Many of these parts are interrelated, says the council. This makes the once- routine tuneup a much more precise procedure.

IN ADDITION, parts continue to be added as carmakers strive to meet federal regulations for higher fuel economy and lower emissions.

Among these are electronically controlled carburetor feedback systems, more sophisticated fuel evaporation controls and more refined thermostatically controlled air cleaners.

Sound like advanced engineering jargon? It's everyday terminology for the professional mechanic who now deals with computerized engines and test equipment are part of a quality tuneup.
