

Conservatives welcome Kissinger to the fold

By STEVE BARNABY

Political observers betting on an anti-Henry Kissinger rally during the former secretary of state's address to the GOP convention ended up in the red.

After having met earlier this week with Republican presidential nominee Ronald Reagan, Kissinger sauntered to the podium and delivered a hard-line professorial lecture on foreign policy. Instead of being harassed by delegate jeers, the Nobel Peace Prize winner was greeted with a standing ovation.

Before the GOP gathering in Detroit, many conservatives had objected to Kissinger addressing the convention.

Kissinger has been considered by many Republican conservatives as being "too soft" on Communist nations with his policy of detente and endorsement of the Panama Canal and Salt II treaties.

Most feared a repeat of the 1964 GOP convention when Barry Goldwater supporters refused to allow New York Governor Nelson Rockefeller to finish his speech.

At one time Kissinger served as Rockefeller's foreign affairs advisor and is considered to be a member of the moderate Republican faction.

But Reagan, who throughout the campaign has insisted on a show of unity before national network cameras, got just what he wanted.

THE GEORGETOWN UNIVERSITY professor was anything but too soft when it came to criticizing the Carter foreign affairs policies.

"After nearly four years of confusion we have become impotent bystanders as the world lurches from crisis to crisis," he told the late-night gathering.

"The Carter administration has managed the extraordinary feat of having at one and the same time the worst relations with our adversaries and the most serious upheavals in the developing world since the second World War."

Kissinger labeled Carter foreign policy as naive and a philosophy of "abdication."

He swept through the litany of what he considered to be Carter transgressions: vacillation on the neutron bomb; a barometric defense budget; acceptance of Soviet troops in Cuba; the Afghanistan invasion; and, of course the Iranian hostages.

"The neglect of our defenses has tempted mounting threats to our national security," he warned.

Carter policy endorses the use of "cynical expedients to get through the election."

"We are told endless alibis for doing nothing that not every upheaval affects our interests, that the disasters have complex socio-economic causes, that Communist gains will prove temporary," he said.

KISSINGER who would very much like to rejoin a national administration offered his own solutions.

- Rebuild military defenses.
- End Soviet expansionism.
- Mend alliances.
- Work with persons of "good will" around the world to fulfill mankind's positive aspirations.

"Sooner or later our weakness will produce a catastrophe. The time is too serious to play a numbers game with Detroit anytime."

our defense budget," he said, insisting that the gap in military spending between the Soviet Union and the United States be closed.

In traditional Kissinger philosophy, he called for a restoration of the political balance of power.

"In the past five years, Soviet weapons, Soviet friendship treaties, Soviet proxy troops, terrorists financed and trained by the Soviet bloc and outright Soviet intervention have worsened almost every crisis," he said.

The present administration's "congenial fear of our power" results in magnifying risks, he said.

"A new administration will show that blackmail doesn't work, that our friendship has benefits while hostility to us involves penalties."

Of special concern to Kissinger were this country's relationship with foreign allies.

CARTER is HAVING a tough time cementing relations with foreign leaders, many of whom have publicly expressed dismay with Carter foreign policy.

"One of our highest priorities must be to mend our ties with our friends, with almost all of whom the administration has managed to pick a quarrel," he said.

The lack of a cogent energy policy among western leaders demonstrates the turmoil of Carter policy, according to Kissinger.

"The most blatant demonstration of allied disarray is the semiannual display of impotence when the leaders of the industrialized nations wait for the latest dispensation from the producers regarding price increases."

To counter this, Kissinger called for a "purposeful" long-range policy.

Gerald Ford is the strongest possible vice presidential candidate, according to former Gov. George Romney, who said he would also support Bush as the next best.

Could he support Reagan just as enthusiastically if he chooses someone else?

"Not quite," he replied.

"Detroit is back in the running as a convention city," Sen. Richard Schweiker of Pennsylvania told the Michigan delegation caucus. "We'll come to Detroit anytime."
