

The Warner Mansion on Grand River commemorates the accomplishments of Michigan's first three-term governor, Fred Warner, who was a prominent Farmington businessman at the beginning of the century.

The Philbrick Tavern, located at Power and Eleven Mile, was reputed to have once been a stop along the Underground Railroad.

Much still stands

Farmington is city rich in history

Visitors to Farmington and Farmington Hills during the Founders Festival are in for some surprises. Those here for the first time may be unaware of the history, charm and heritage of the communities.

After the tents and ferris wheels have been packed away and the last notes of band music have faded, newcomers may want to return for another, quieter look at the area.

Our suggestions are for a walk-drive tour of the area with stops along the way for shopping and refreshment stops.

1) Park your car in the area directly behind the stores on the southeast corner of Farmington Road and Grand River. There's the Village Mall on the corner with a small restaurant if you need coffee and doughnuts to get you going.

2) Jerry's Bookstore directly across from the mall on Farmington has a collection of books, new and used, to delight bargain hunters. Years ago, it was the offices for the old Farmington Enterprise. Today, we are located at 23352 Farmington Road, across the street from Jerry's. Drop on by.

3) The Masonic Temple on the north-
