O&E photographer, writer help catch convention flavor

Birmingham, Livonia, Bloomfield Hills, South-field, West Bloomfield, Troy, and Rochester are all being repretesented with delegates at this week's 1980 Democratic convention in New York. And so are the Observer & Eccentric Newspapers with po-litical writer Tim Richard and free-lance photo-grapher Doug Ashley, Richard and Ashley are cap-turing in words and pictures the suburban flavor and roles being played by Michigan's delegates. Going into the convention, Michigan was split, 71-70, in Kennedy and Carter delegates. That caused a lot of caucus conversation. But in the end, the group united. Its backing of the Equal Rights Amendment helped hammer an ERA plank into the party plat-form.

West Bloomfield attorney Robert E. Nederlander has his ERA sash adjusted by Barabara Rom, 5136 Corners, West Bloomfield, as Ann Mastey, 36066 Ann Arbor Trail, Livonia, looks on approvingly. Michigan's delegation was split early on in

Detroit Mayor Coleman Young basked under the Garden's bril-fliant overhead lights as he continudally waved to friends on the convention floor. Young, the party's platform committee chairman, was a Carter man from the heginning. If the president is re-elected, Young's city will probably continue to benefit from federal programs — and the front door of the White House will remain open to binm.
