

It's shoe in for classics this season

News in fall footwear is comfort and practicality. The newness is particularly seen in daywear where shoes have plummeted to new depths, with heels so low in many cases they are almost nonexistent.

Suit dressing still calls for the 2- to 3-inch heel as does dressing for after-five. Most of the shoes are as soft as glove leather, simply to encase rather than confine the foot.

High heels are lower, but the new heels are designed to look high while not exceeding 3 inches.

This is definitely the year of the pump, for all hours of the day or night. Sandals will be receiving a rest this year, because they simply do not look right with the new fall clothes. Investment in a leather pump for day and a black suede or satin pump for evening will prove wise moves.

Color choices are unlimited with teal emerging as the new fashion color for the foot, followed closely by Granada or winter red.
