Sewing students show fashions

Irene MacKinnon's fall fashion show will begin with a luncheon at noon, Friday, Nov. 21, in Farmington Community Center. This popular twice-a-year event provides sewers with valuable hints and innovative ideas, as well as pattern numbers and easy methods to achieve professional results. Mrs. MacKinnon's running commentary during the modeling has been described by past audiences as a "sewing lesson in itself." Her students will be showing sport, dressy and holiday clothes as well as small children's fashions. "An interesting highlight will be a fur vest created from a student's outdated fur stole, and another beautiful vest fashioned from an old quilt. Both are just lovely," said Mrs. MacKinnon. She is proud of the student who salvaged a too-short white cashmere coat boasting a luxurious fox fur collar and cuffs by redesigning the fabric collar and cuffs and adding the fox to the hem for a dramatic accent. The fashion show features Mrs. MacKinnon's fall-semester students modeling the results of the nine-week class they have recently completed. Tickets at $9 per person are limited and immediate reservations are suggested. They are available at the center, 24705 Farmington Road. Door prizes, always handmade, are a special highlight of the afternoon, which is a benefit for the Farmington Community Center.
