one herself — a brand new dress marked half the tag price.

"I didn't know what to expect," said the Western Michigan graduate who will be married in August. "But this is just what I wanted and I don't think it's necessary to spend hundreds of dollars for a dress."

Conversely, the 1970s was the Me Decade. "It was an introspective age." Self-help books topped the best-seller lists.

The 1980s, Cavaiani predicts, will be the We Decade. With the uncertainty of the economy and world affairs, people will return to the values held aloft in the 1950s — intimacy and security.

"More people will want to make a commitment. Living together already is on the way out."
