Senators Dissect Education Reform

By MARGARET MILLER
Women's Editor

State Sen. Sander Levin sees two major faults in Gov. William Milliken's educational reform package.

"First," the leading Democrat told Farmington members of the American Association of University Women, "it doesn't find the right blend of state and local responsibility for the schools."

"And second, we need a tax system that is not only new but also more equitable for all. This plan increases inequities."

The former senate majority leader from Berkley shared the spotlight in a special meeting on education in the Farmington Community Center Wednesday night with Republican Sen. Emil Lockwood of St. Louis, current majority leader.

LOCKWOOD told the gathering he regretted that the Milliken program, which has passed the state senate, was being held up in the House of Representatives on the "emotional" issue of parochialism.

"We should get off the pitch of concentrating all discussion on the matter of aid to non-public schools, and get on with the work of needed educational reform," he said.

Actually the parochial issue, Lockwood stated, is one of "additional aid to non-public schools." He pointed out that public money already gives assistance to private colleges and universities that are rightly church-oriented.

HE MENTIONED the State Scholarship Fund, which may be used by needy students for tuition to the college of their choice, whether public or private, and state subsidization of training needed students at the Catholic University of Detroit as well as the University of Michigan.

Lockwood also told of instances like one in which Federal money provided a new athletic center on the campus of Alma College, where he has served as a director. "No Presbyterian money could be used to build a chapel."

"Many people think we should not have taken these steps and are surprised that we have," Lockwood added. "I'm just pointing out that aid to non-public schools is an accomplished fact."

He said he favored the section of the Milliken proposal that would fund 50% of the salaries of certified teachers who were teaching accredited courses in non-public schools.

LOCKWOOD AND LEVIN agreed on the need for Education Financing Reform.

"My Berkley school district," Levin said, "borders the Madison school district, where the total tax money available for education seems locked at $7,000 a year per pupil, and the Southfield district, where new businesses have made the amount behind each pupil about $23,000 a year and going up."

"It doesn't make sense at all. If we had the choice, it should be the other way around, giving more money to the schools where the children have less incentive and background home."

"But I shouldn't say it. We do have the choice. It's our system. We created it and we continue it."

SEVERAL AUDIENCE members expressed concern over the special education program in Oakland County, where an extra millage voted by residents several years ago has provided a program considered one of the best in the country.

Levin said it was true that under the Milliken proposals the program would be a state responsibility and added "that is one of the things that needs better thinking through."

But he added that the regional responsibility plan does contain a mandate that in cases where local school districts have shown the ability to operate outstanding programs, they will continue to have the responsibility for them.

ANOTHER QUESTION answered by Levin dealt with what the paper called "the anti-gritty for property owners,"—whether there would be assurance of a property tax reduction if the state income tax were raised to finance education.

"They are tied together," Levin stated. "The constitutional amendment that would be needed to raise the state income tax could not take effect until passage of the education bill which would increase state aid and thus reduce local property taxes."

The bride-elect is a sophomore at Northwood Institute, Midland, where she is in secondary studies. Her fiancé is a senior in business management at Northwood. They plan to marry in the fall.

Kenneth Rickey Claims Bride

The marriage of Paula Marie Cary, daughter of Major and Mrs. Samuel G. Cary of Fort Lee, Va., to Kenneth L. Rickey, son of Mr. and Mrs. George L. Rickey of Farmington, took place Feb. 7 in the 16th Street Chapel, Fort Lee.

The double-ring ceremony was solemnized in an Episcopal service conducted by Chaplain D.K. Lunetta.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a full-length gown of white imported lace over tulle. Imported chantilly lace trimmed the waistline, roll collar, long pointed sleeves and chapel train.

Her fingertip veil of white silk illusion fell from a crown of lace petals accented with seed pearls. She carried a white prayer book with cascade of white roses and red sweetheart roses.

MRS. GENE MANWARING of Livonia, sister of the bridegroom, was matron of honor, and Mrs. Richard D. Strauss of Fort Lee was bridesmaid. They wore identical gowns of red velvet, designed with an empire waist, scoop neckline and long, fitted sleeves. Their headpieces were red velvet bows and they carried cascades of variegated red and white carnations.

Margaret Cary, sister of the bride, was flower girl. Her gown was also red velvet, and she carried a miniature nosegay of variegated red and white carnations.

Paul Rickey was his brother's best man. Ushers were Rick Cary, brother of the bride, and Gene Manwaring, brother-in-law of the bridegroom.

The bride's mother chose a French blue coat and dress ensemble with matching accessories and dress knit ensemble with matching accessories.

A reception was held in the Lee Room at the Fort Lee Officers' Club.

The couple also was honored with a Feb. 15 reception for 200 in the Farmington Community Center. The bridegroom will leave March 5 for a year in Japan with the U.S. Navy.

Conversation Starters

We all want to be considered self-starters, a normal bit of egoism. Practically all the pioneering figures who have illuminated history have been self-starters. But what does it take? What is the magic fuel that sets a person's motor engine to working? One thing that marks a self-starter is a desire to satisfy himself—his self-esteem or his conscience. He cares not only the high regard of other people; he must also have his own. And once he sets himself a course, the truly self-motivated person usually proceeds with the utmost confidence. Are you a self-starter?
