

Bold ideas

Carl Lagerfeld for Chloe spring is prophetic. This designer, who brought the very broad shoulder back to fashion a few years ago, has now abandoned the Joan Crawford shoulder in favor of a tube silhouette.

This season he creates a new, dropped, rolled neckline that he calls "The Lasso." He also frequently finishes his two-inch wide hemlines with padded lasso hems. His designs also reveal that he is determined to lengthen and narrow the body while ignoring the waist.

Lagerfeld's statement that any skirt length is a good length was clear when Saks Fifth Avenue's Troy store held a luncheon showing of the complete Paris collection for some of its preferred customers. The designer showed every length imaginable, from below midcalf to above the knee.

His new knee-length pants are frequently topped by big tunics. Slim tunics narrow over full skirts to emphasize his love of opposite shapes.

Lagerfeld also favors pale, soft, subtle colorings for day. Black, lightening bolt-shot gowns are important for evening.

Shoes, which he designed for the collection, are all flat, fashioned in primary and pale colors with an emphasis on metallics for day.
