

Chatham Square was filled with music by people like Rick DeForge, who is a member of the band Visitor.

These guys are playing field hockey as part of the fun and games at Kid's Day. The players are (left) Chris Roessler and Mark Boettcher.

The weather was great for the festival. The sun was so hot that Glenna Clogg of Farmington Hills even had to use a stand-by to shade herself from it.

Staff photos
by Randy Borst

Believe it or not, some persons didn't find the festival that exciting. In fact one little girl was sleeping on the sidelines. Six-week-old Mary Gustafson sleeps next to her dad, Gary, while he enjoyed the fun.

People lined the streets of the parade, and three persons used their station wagon for a convenient perch. They are (from left) Max Kielling, Kurt Hale and Sue Waind.

Greeting the spectators during this year's festival parade were an assorted group of strange but friendly animal-like characters including this wide-eyed panda bear.

Clowns always attract a lot of attention especially when surrounded by the young at heart. This is G-Whiz greeting children at this year's Kid's Day in the City Park.

The reigning queen of this year's festival, Kelly Lynn Garver, charmed residents and visitors throughout the week with her pretty smile and beautiful red hair. Here she waves at spectators during the parade.