

Programming mars concert

By Mary Doerr
special writer

The Meadow Brook Music Festival came to a close with a Sunday evening pops concert that included a disintegrable mixture of a new composition and a virtuoso piano solo with a few crowd pleasers in an array of poor taste and unrefined musical programming.

Flavio Varani and Martin Scott Kohns, both local artists, were guest performers for the sell-out concert. At Conductor Neville Marriner's request, pianist Varani played Rachmaninoff's "Rhapsody on a Theme of Paganini."

Kohns' "Rendezvous Concerto" for flute with piano and orchestra was premiered by the orchestra with Clement Barone as flutist and the composer at the piano.

The two selections, though both were popular in nature, were too divergent to have been included on the same program. The orchestra selections that preceded and followed the appearance of the two guests could hardly be perceived as complementary to the performance of either.

Varani, Oakland University artist-in-residence, is an artist of distinctly outstanding qualities. Again, Sunday evening he showed a superb talent as he played the Rachmaninoff work. Varani understands the jazzy rhythms of these variations of the Paganini theme and he has the strength to handle the intense demand for speed and power.

Varani's artistry is such that it made Sunday's programming unbelievable. His musicianship isn't one of a pops artist and to be treated as such can only reflect on the Meadow Brook Music Festival and the Detroit Symphony Orchestra.
