

Siding rated as popular improvement

Some home improvements aren't improvements at all.

Before investing in remodeling, ask yourself what you want to accomplish.

If it's resale value you're after, for example, avoid projects that appeal only to your own particular needs and tastes.

AN ELABORATE HOME entertainment center with built-in stereo and video equipment may be ideal if you love good sound, but potential buyers may view it as extravagant.

So what is a good home improvement? It's one that (1) upgrades both the appearance, livability and value of a home; (2) is designed to last many years; (3) requires little care and upkeep; and (4) reduces the cost of operating the home.

Because minimal maintenance is important to today's busy families, home siding is among the most popular — and worthwhile — of all home improvements. Homeowners who want to improve their home's appearance and value, yet avoid the drudgery of frequent repainting, are choosing solid vinyl siding.

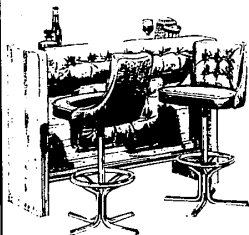

VINYL SIDING WHICH doesn't need painting, meets all criteria for a good home improvement. Available in a wide range of colors, styles and textures, this siding material suits most architectural styles — from stately colonials to graceful modern ranch homes.

The growing popularity of vinyl siding is also attributed to its unsurpassed durability.

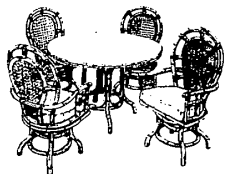

Since its color is clear through, scratches won't impair its appearance. And the siding won't peel, dent, rust, pit or corrode. Vinyl siding also meets the easy-care requirements of a good home improvement.

An occasional rinse with a mild detergent and water is usually all that is needed to keep it fresh looking.
