

Acting foreman at the wedding

Jan Mills is taking tips on what the maid-of-honor does at a wedding.

"I keep asking Dana what I'm supposed to do," admitted the General Motors Institute senior, whose former classmate just tells her to "play foreman and delegate work."

"I went to school five years for this" laughed the industrial administration major.

So far, the toughest job was keeping her best friend's engagement a secret until she told her Beta Sigma Phi sorority sisters. The young women announce an engagement by giving out chocolate candies.

"I was really excited, but couldn't tell anyone," said Ms. Mills, who met Ms. Deane three years ago in class. "It was a really hard secret to keep."

She expected her friend to wait until she graduated to marry, since most

GMI students do. "It was a surprise, but I'm really glad for her. She's really special, and their marriage should be a good one."

Now that the attendants' dresses have been picked out, she is thinking about a shower, which Ms. Deane requested be co-ed. "I've never been to one, but I think it's a good idea," Ms. Mills said.

"I like it, and that's what she wants."

A romantic at heart, she is enjoying the upcoming wedding plans, although her own would be much more theatrical.

"I always want really grand things," said Ms. Mills, who calls herself an "actor at heart."

"But Dana isn't interested in acting out a part. She just wants to get married."
